Summary: Can Hiccup dare to be different? Poem about the Forbidden Friendship scene in the movie.

Forbidden Friendship

This is a poem I wrote about the first time Hiccup and Toothless touched, the day in the Cove when Hiccup drops his old superstitions and prejudices for good - I find that scene really powerful.

This is NOT HiccupxToothless! That's just weird.

>Forbidden Friendship

Sky - blue robin's eggs

Clouds are blushing pink

Softest wings enfold me

The beauty makes me blink

Two drawings intertwined

Scraped onto the ground

My head against his chest

Tail wrapped round and round

My arms around his shoulders

His scales against my skin

Glass-green eyes half-closed

Oh, think how long it's been...

The time since war has started

The time that has been lost

Bloody swords and gleaming blades

The lives, the deaths it's cost

I lean forward and breathe deeply

I sigh and close my eyes

Everything I've ever known

All of it is lies

The breeze softly sighs and groans

Like a dragon in its lair

This friendship - oh, I love him

Do I, do I dare?
